

Israeli President Mr. Shimon Peres visited Elcam's Dalton manufacturing plant on August 2010.

His visit is part of his personal initiative to visit companies of various industries around the country. The Dalton plant is an excellent example of the strength of Israel's high technology industry.

The president was welcomed by Mr. Ehud Raivitz, the CEO of Elcam Medical and Mr. Nadav Shlomot, the Dalton Site Manager; the president was quite impressed from the wide variety of cultural and social backgrounds of the employees, representing a cross-section of Israeli society.

After the short presentation the President and his small entourage entered the clean rooms.

The president passed between most of the employees asking them for their names, where are they from, how long they are working for the organization and last, do they love their job. One of the employees, Rima Khlul from Jish now working at the transducer department, said: "I was very excited and glad to meet President Peres; he was interested about my former job in the welding department and whether it was difficult to sit and weld for the whole day. I felt the president refer to me as a person and not just as an employee, he was attentive and kind. At last, the president took a picture with all of the employees, and I felt confident and proud to stand by him".

The employees were very excited from the true and personal interest of Mr. Shimon Peres about every one of them. At the end of the visit President Peres wished the Muslims and Druze employees an easy fast and to the rest Shanah Tova!!
